

SwimBuddz Intro to Water Session

A simple way for employees to try swimming before joining a longer programme

Many adults are interested in learning how to swim but have never had the opportunity to learn properly. Some are uncomfortable around water, while others do not want to commit to several weeks of lessons before knowing whether swimming is for them.

The SwimBuddz Intro to Water session gives a small group of employees a chance to try swimming in a relaxed, coach-led session designed for complete beginners.

It is one introductory session - not a commitment to the full 12-week programme.

Why swimming?

Swimming offers more than a full-body workout. It is a low-impact form of exercise that gives people a real break from screens and work pressure. Many people leave the pool feeling refreshed, calmer and mentally reset. It is also effectively a cardiovascular workout that supports heart and lung fitness, while allowing participants to move at a pace that suits their ability and fitness level.

For many adults, the value goes further. A supportive first session can help them become more comfortable in the water, gain confidence and start learning important water safety skills they can carry into their personal and family lives. Trying it alongside colleagues also creates a shared experience outside the usual work setting.

How the session works

Recommended group	8-10 employees for the first session; larger groups would require additional coach coverage
Duration	2 hours
Timing	Usually Saturday morning, or another agreed low-disruption time
Location	A partner pool in Yaba, Victoria Island, Ikoyi or Festac. This is subject to availability and participant location
Experience level	No prior swimming ability is required

The final venue is confirmed only after we understand where interested employees are based and check pool availability.

What happens during the session

The exact flow is adjusted to the group and to each participant's comfort level. A typical session includes:

Welcome and safety briefing (about 15 mins)	Introductions, pool rules and a quick comfort check.
Getting comfortable in the water (about 25 mins)	Safe entry and exit, breathing and supported water-confidence exercises.
Floating and basic movement (about 60 mins)	Simple floating, body-position and movement exercises, adjusted to each participant.
Practice and wrap-up (about 20 mins)	Supported practice, questions and a short post-session feedback form.

Nobody is expected to perform, compete or enter deeper water before they are comfortable. The aim is a calm first experience and a clear sense of what the next stage of learning would involve.

SwimBuddz takes care of

- Confirm the pool, professional coach coverage and session plan.
- Share a short registration form covering water confidence and anything the coach should know.
- Send reminders and a simple what-to-bring note.
- Provide basic teaching aids where needed.
- Run the session, collect feedback and prepare the company summary.

The company provides

- Nominate one contact person for coordination.
- Share the registration link with employees.
- Approve the date, location and final quote.
- Cover the agreed pilot fee so participants do not have to pay personally.

Participant preparation, safety and privacy

Participants receive a short what-to-bring note before the session. Basic swimwear, a towel and a change of clothes are required. A swim cap and goggles are recommended, but optional gear should not prevent someone from joining the pilot.

Before the session, SwimBuddz confirms the selected venue, coach coverage, lifeguard support and basic safety equipment. The session begins with a safety briefing and exercises are adjusted to each participant's confidence. Personal health information, fears and individual skill notes stay with the coach; the company receives only agreed, aggregated feedback.

What the company receives afterwards

Within three business days, SwimBuddz sends a short summary covering:

- How many employees registered and attended.
- Anonymous feedback on the overall experience.
- Whether participants reported a change in water confidence and whether the session felt valuable to their wellbeing.
- How many employees would be interested in another session or a longer programme.
- A practical recommendation on whether there appears to be enough interest to continue.

Cost

The introductory session is ideally sponsored by the company so employees can take part without paying personally.

The final quote is based on the confirmed group size and selected pool. For a standard partner pool, the quote can cover pool access, coaching, coordination, basic teaching aids and the post-session summary in one figure. Premium, private or exclusive-use venue arrangements may cost more. Nothing is booked until the company approves the quote.

What happens next

A short planning conversation is used to confirm:

- The expected number of participants.
- Where employees are mainly based.
- A suitable date and preferred location.
- The available budget.
- Whether the session is a standalone wellness activity or a possible first step towards a longer programme.

There is no obligation to proceed with the 12-week programme after the introductory session.
